Cricket Wire Cricket Wire is an American cricket news and commentary website dedicated to covering all forms of the sport. Cricket Wire was founded by American filmmaker John Cornwell. History Cricket Wire was conceived by sports journalist John Cornwell and Australian film producer Tim Low. Cornwell is the author of the award-winning book The Power of Cricket. Cricket Wire launched in New York City on June 16, 2011 and was a finalist at the 2012 Weblog Awards in the Best Cricket Publication category. In March 2012, Cornwell began trading his time through a temporary content agency and Cricket Wire split into four distinct segments—Fan Report, Scoreboard, Daily Diary and Play-by-Play. In 2013, Cricket Wire was awarded a grant from New England Cricket, an organization based in Massachusetts, aimed at helping young men and women play cricket. The grant was to be used as the launching pad for a full-fledged website dedicated to the sport. Cricket Wire began in 2014 as the "daily cricket news, commentary and fan interactions" and over the next few years consolidated its place in the cricket media and became the pre-eminent cricket website in the United States. Content The website covers American cricket. It has written a number of reports on cricket in the United States, including on the views of current and former players. It has also covered the U.S. domestic structure, with articles covering the United States domestic competitions, the Collegiate Championship Series, the national team, and the U.S. squads for ICC events like the ICC Americas Twenty20 Championship. Cricket Wire also covers Cricket Canada. Cricket Wire is a supporter of women's cricket in the United States. Every year, it hosts a number of events to support the participation of young women and girls in the sport. It is currently partnered with United States Youth Cricket.
